Description:

- Visitors experience in Phase 1 the fundamental appeal of the kaleidoscopic radiation of the glass core, with primary colors radiating outward. Slow rotation and music enhance the immersive experience (no video).
- In Phase 2, two concealed external light sources are added, creating a fascinating world of colors and forms — from inner luminosity radiating outward to delicate reflections on the glass body itself (no video).
- In Phase 3, a live camera video signal is directed to a projector and overlaid with a pre-recorded mirrored video feed (e.g., long-duration tracks in different color moods) from the same camera and position. Visitors can actively interact — for example, by stopping the rotation, manipulating the lighting via a Hue app or manually, or by creating their own color scenarios.

This results in an infinite playground of spaces, color worlds, and surprises.
